HISTORICAL NOTE: In 1930, Arizona cotton farmers formed the Arizona Cotton Growers Association, an organization that lasted only three years due to lack of funds. In 1943, 131,000 bales of cotton were produced in Arizona and the Arizona Cotton Growers Association (ACGA) was re-established with the objective of uniting the cotton growers around such pressing issues as labor shortages and water rights.

During WWII, when much of the available work force was overseas, the newly formed ACGA worked with the Bracero program to recruit Mexican Nationals to help work the cotton fields. The Bracero Program was a series of diplomatic agreements to import temporary laborers from Mexico to the United States. ACGA built a camp near Nogales to process the Mexican Nationals recruited to harvest cotton.

Key accomplishments in the 1940s include: eliminating governmental purchasing discrimination against Arizona's irrigated short staple cotton (vs. non-irrigated cotton grown in other states); defeating the Farm Security Administration's attempt to put cotton picking on an hourly, rather than weight, basis; and the grade reassignment of Arizona's American-Egyptian crop resulting in an additional $300,000 to Arizona cotton farmers. By the late 1940s, about two-thirds of the state's cotton acreage was signed with the ACGA.

The 1950s brought about some major changes for the cotton industry with the introduction of automated pickers and new oil mills for cottonseed. In 1958, an outbreak of pink bollworm spearheaded a movement for state-assisted pesticide programs. Arizona produced a record 1,070,000 bales of cotton in 1953.

In the 1960s, due to technological advances, the Bracero program ended. Research on pesticides, harvesting and fertilizers became a priority. The ACGA actively supported the Central Arizona Project. In 1961, Clyde Wilson, a farmer, lawyer and Major General (ret.) from Buckeye, AZ who had assisted ACGA in lobbying efforts in Washington, became president of the National Cotton Council. This marked the first time Arizona had been represented at the top of the American cotton industry. On the precipice of losing market share to man-made fibers, Wilson helped U.S. cotton farmers form Cotton Incorporated to raise money to advertise cotton to consumers.

The early 1970s were a time of strength for ACGA as the cotton industry in Arizona prospered. Another Arizona farmer, Charles Youngker of Buckeye became President of the National Cotton Council, and cotton prices skyrocketed. Despite these positives, the 1970s also saw the beginning of the dominance of urban over farm interests. The use of pesticides came under fire, and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) multiplied the difficulties of producing cotton.

The 1980s brought more challenges to the Arizona cotton industry. China began producing cotton in the eighties, devastating Arizona's export business. Large-scale, destructive flooding across much of Central Arizona in 1983, the economic crisis of 1985, and the ever-present boll-weevil problem led many Arizona cotton farmers to lose their lands and homes. These conditions led ACGA to become much more involved in the political process. The ACGA influenced the adoption of the Boll Weevil Eradication Program which effectively ended the fight against the boll weevil.

The 1990s and 2000s have been times of constant struggle for the Arizona cotton industry. As soon as the boll weevil was eradicated, the bollworm problem got worse. As soon as the bollworm problem was solved, the whitefly and sticky cotton began to affect the cotton yield. Water rights issues and environmental concerns remain critical to Arizona Cotton Growers.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE:

This collection has been re-processed to incorporate additional materials, including photographs; to insure accuracy of description and arrangement; and to reformat the finding aid to improve online access. Original order is unknown.

This collection covers a critical time period for cotton growers in Arizona and the nation. It documents how ACGA fought to make the cotton industry a priority for State government and the Arizona economy. The organization actively lobbied federal officials, such as Senator Barry Goldwater and Congressman Morris Udall, on water rights, the Central Arizona Project, labor shortages, equal pay for irrigated cotton, and pesticide regulation. ACGA's relationships with the University Of Arizona School Of Agriculture, the National Cotton Council, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture demonstrate its far-reaching interests and influence. This collection includes extensive grey literature such as federal, state, and university technical bulletins and reports.

Arranged in six series, then alphabetically and chronologically within. Series I: Board of Directors; Series II: Committees; Series III: Federal Agencies & National Organizations; Series IV: Correspondence; Series V: Publications; Series VI Photographs.
